HARRY THURSTON PECK.

He's so familiar with the great, this Harry Thurston Peck, that every man of high estate has wept upon his neck. The poet Browning pondered deep the things that Harry said; Lord Tennyson was wont to sleep in Harry's cattle-shed. When Ibsen wrote, he wildly cried: "My life will be a wreck, if this, my drama, is denied, the praise of Thurston Peck!" Said Kipling, in his better days: "What use is my renown, since Harry scans my blooming lays, and blights them with a frown?" The poet, when his end draws near cries: "Death brings no alarms, if I, in that grim hour of fear, may die in Harry's arms." And, being dead, his spirit knows no shade of doubt or gloom, if Harry plants a little rose upon his humble tomb. Poor Shakespeare and those elder bards, who haunt the blessed isles, were born too soon for such rewards as Harry Thurston's smiles. But joy will lighten their despair, and flood the realms of space, for Harry Peck will join them there-they'll see him face to face!

When not racing, Grant drives a demonstrating car about Boston and recently he has been getting notoristy there as an unintentional obstractor of traffic.

Grant had an interesting bosinosities and tender, hauling a flat our beging the vanderbilt Cun, all worked out in miniature and set on the bood of his six-cylinder Aloo forcing eat.

While Grant and his car were standing in a narrow street of the flith, the sonowest, next Monday atternoon and diminutive ratioal attracted a crowd. The law allows a car to stop five minutes in the work of breathers and the deliberate driver "took in a place and the deliberate driver "took in the carries and the deliberate driver "took in a place and the deliberate driver "took in the carries and the driver "took in the carries and the deliberate driver "took in the carries and the deliberate driver "took in the carries and the driver to driver the driver "took in the carries and the driver the carries and the considered as the carries and the considered A word about the scenery is also not amiss particularly concerning the pictures of the "ancestors" in the second act. True, the lines of the play say that "they are not like the works of Raphael" and that they are "stiff and awward." but this cannot be considered an excuse for the fearful collection of carloatures that adorned the wall of Charles Surface's ouse. Surely something could be done to improve them—even if it is still deemed advisable to retain the scenery of other
